A 45-minute talk on why change stalls — and what to fix before it starts

For a leadership team, a board, a credit union or an all-staff session. 45 minutes with questions.

There is no fee, and no obligation to book anything after it.

The talk is the talk. I will not pitch from the front of the room, and I will not follow up to sell you something afterwards. If we never speak again after the session, that is a complete outcome — these talks are how the work finds its audience.

The signature talk: Change Anesthesiology

For twenty years, roughly seven in ten change initiatives have fallen short — an estimated $2.3 trillion a year. The frameworks have multiplied; the number has not moved. My argument is that we have been treating the wrong condition. Resistance is not the obstacle — it is the signal. It tells you something true about the conditions upstream: drained energy, narrow perspective, minds already full before your project arrived. The real work happens before the initiative begins. Hence the name — in 1846, anaesthesia did not make surgery better, it made surgery survivable.

What your people take away

- A different first question: not who is resisting? but what conditions made resistance sensible?
- A four-stage model they can apply to a change already underway, or one still on the drawing board.
- A practical read on why past initiatives stalled, before the next one launches.

Other talks I can give

- White Space Thinking — finding opportunity in the gaps others have not noticed.
- Perspective Thinking — how leaders widen the view before they make the call.
- Tinergy — the small units of energy that decide whether a team moves or stalls.
- Kinetic Energy of Ideas — what turns an idea from talk into movement.
- Building Your Multitasking Strength — carrying several demands without losing quality.
- Evolution Management — running an organisation as a system that evolves, not one that ends.
